

U. S. Rubber Holds First Disaster Drill

Sirens sounded at 1:30 p.m. today as employees of the U. S. Rubber Company at the Kankakee Ordnance Unit took part in a simulated disaster drill.

At the first three-minute blast, employees of the Unit evacuated the area. The "all-clear" was signalled with three one-minute blasts with two minutes of silence between each of the signals.

The disaster test, first of its kind in recent months, was directed by John Raytkwich, superintendent of safety.